rounding the throne, and supporting it with blood-stained hands, have of late heard many bilter and insulting truths from the lips of courseous and honest men. They will avenge themselves for it, and their vengeance will be severe.

War on People,

"Embittored, accustomed to sleed blood, and encouraged by the reign of lawlessness, they will once more appail the world by their deeds. They will commence to annihilate and destroy the leaders of the people, and, having destroyed the leaders, they will again designed to the people, and having destroyed the leaders, they will again designed and defenseless people who are dreaming or peace and civilization, and who had been so impatiently hoping for the triumph of justice.

been so impatiently hoping for the trumph of justice.

The black blood-soaked wings of death will flutter over the country for months. The exhausted earth will swallow thousands of corpsps of men whose only orime was the desire to live a human life.

"Many women and children will perish from bullets, swords and clubs. Many erying outrages will be perpetrated. The world will be seized with horror and indignation. Here and there public meet-world will be seized with horror and indignation. Here and there public meetings will be held, at which the speakers will eloquently denounce the Czar and his band of savages.

The speakers will be rewayded by applause, and the public will leave the meetings in the proud conviction that they have responded to the call of the unfortunate people of a foreign land, and thus discharged their duty to humanity. At the same time the blood of the Russians will flow in wide streams."

Not Civilized.

"Are we civilized people, or are we not?" Gorky then asked. He declares that he thinks not, and that people who live quietly when everything around them it soaked in blood, are simply satiated animals. If such crying horrors occur as those

"If such crying horrors occur as those which we now witness in Russia," he says, "true men and women cannot remain quiet at their sight."

He closed with an appeal for help for Russia and asked: "Are there in this country living men, and will they hear me?"

ST. PETERSBURG, July 28,—The switchboard of the central telegraph station in St. Petersburg was burned out to-day, destroying all communication with the provinces. While there is a suspiction that the "accident" was arranged by revolutionists, no evidence to support it can be found and the telegraph department authorities are apparently satisfied with the explanation of the employes.

Though the public is cut off from telegraph communication with the interior for some time, the government retains the possibility of communicating with the provincial authorities over the railroad wires. Cablo communication is not affected.

"THE LADY EVELYN."

Count Odin, of Roumania, loved the Lady Evelyn, and incidentally carried a death-feud against har father, the Earl of Melbourne, Evelyn's hand being the price of the Earl's life. Gavin Ord, a normal, manly Englishman, loved Evelyn, and quietly decided that the old-world nonsense about the feuds, murders, revenge, etc., should not part them, Evelyn herself, in her normal moments, in herself, in her normal moments. and quietly decided that the old-world nonsense about the feuds, murders, revenge, etc., should not part them, Everlyn herself, in her normal moments, inclined to Gavin. When the blood of her Gypsy mother ran riot in her veins, she hearkened, fascinated, to Odin's pleadings. Add to this the uncanny mystery of the Balkans, a weird case of dual identity, and a duplex action-interest, and you have the threads whereon Max Pemperton has hung his most powerful, elevitest novel, "The Lady Evelyn."

"The Lady Evelyn" is in Mr. Pemberion's best vein, and holds the reader, willing or unwilling, throughout. The wild atmosphere of the Balkans, where human life is accounted as naught against love or hate; the garish, enthralling surroundings of London theatrical life; the aristoratic sidelight of English country life—all are curiously woven and blended by master hind into one of the most remarkable and thrilling heart romances that the twentieth century has seen.

It is hard to write the usual routine "review" of "The Lady Evelyn," for the book itself is too unusual to permit of such handling. As a depicter of contrast of types, clash of characters and varied performance on the whole gamut of human emotions, it stands well-nigh presminent. Apart from its actual and great interest as a novel of action, it is a book which will appeal with equal strength to the student of character and the man who craves "action for his money."

There is always something happening There is always something happening in "The Lady Evelyn," and the "something" is always unexpected and interest-gripping. Mr. Pemberton has condensed into sixty-odd thousand words enough excitement, healthy love interest and suspenseful mystery to stock half a summer's output of ordinary novels. A waste, but a delight.

"The Lady Evelyn" will be the most talked-of novel of the year, and, for once, the "most talked-of" book will be one which it is a privilege (not a penalty) to yead.

Inder the usual system of publishing books, "The Lady Evelyn" would not be placed on the market at less than $1.50 a copy, but a unique system of bookselling has been adopted in the placing of this work, and leading merchants throughout the country, one in each city, have ordered special editions of the book made for their exclusive use.

Miller and Rhoads saw the importance at once of being selected to make this distribution, and ordered an entire edition of the work specially made for them in the usual $1.50 style. Through all pain at times he'd smile, A smile of heavenly birth, And when the angels called him home He smiled farewell to earth.

Peaceful he thy silent slumbers, Peaceful in thy grave so low, Thou no more will join our numbers Thou no more our sorrows know.

Yet again we hope to meet thee.
When the days of life have fled,
And in Heaven with joy to great thee.
Where no farewell tears are shed.
